

Between the fall of 2019 and spring of 2022, through the Serving Native American Students with Holistic Student Supports project, six Tribal Colleges and Universities (TCUs) began redesigning the student experience through the development of a customized holistic student supports framework. This approach emphasizes the need for institutions to deeply understand their students and then collaboratively redesign services that are critical for the success of every student. The colleges participated in a community of practice with other TCUs in the project and received intensive, customized coaching from Achieving the Dream to strengthen their capacity to serve students in their communities. The overarching goal of the project was to help colleges dismantle barriers in structure, policy, and practice to make it easier for students to identify and access academic and nonacademic supports in a timely manner to support completion of their college goals.

A Focus on Closing the Enrollment Funnel Gap

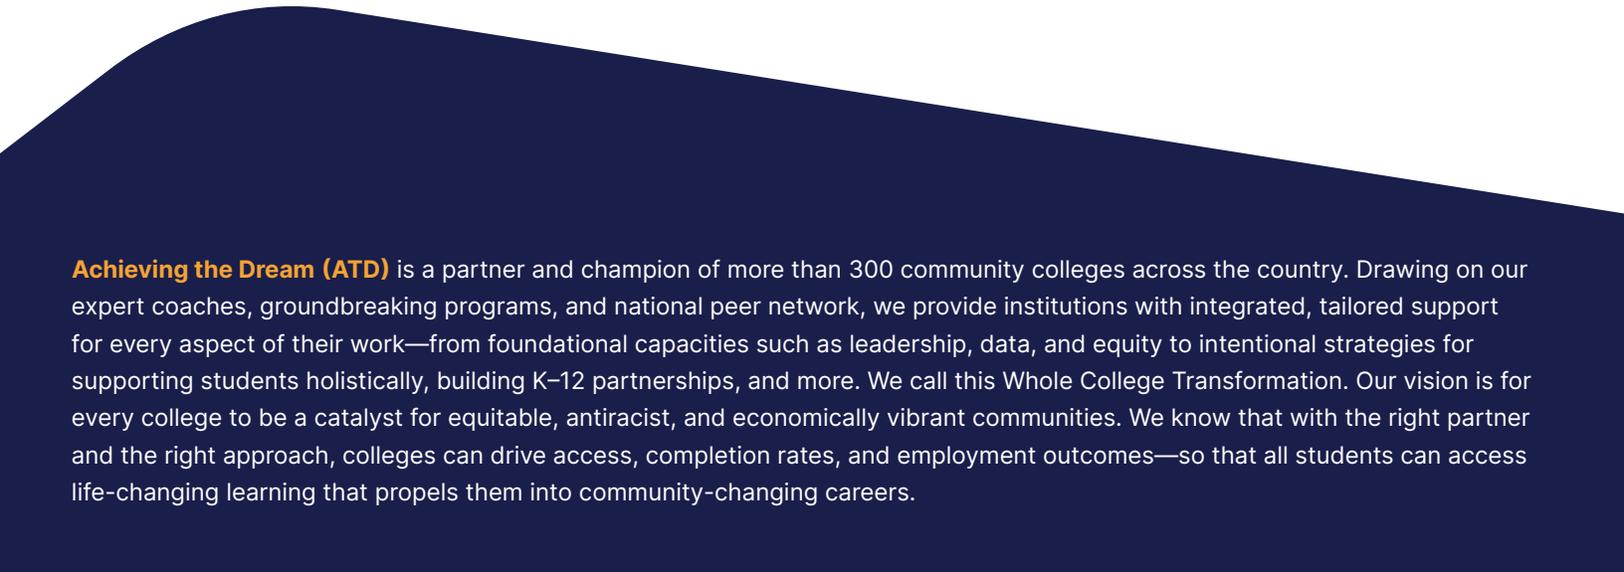

Focusing on student success requires that colleges look at the student journey both into and through their institutions. As Iḷisaḡvik College began assessing their data, leaders quickly realized they had a major gap in their enrollment funnel. More than 50 percent of the students who invested the time and energy to fully complete an application never registered for class. To tackle this pressing issue, the college formed an enrollment management team that sought to shift the thought process from asking, “Are our students college-ready?” to “Is our college student-ready?”

This new mindset prompted Iḷisaḡvik to identify and solve various issues students were encountering. The college:

- Launched an online orientation to ensure all new students had consistent information to start successfully
